

VInt Written Response Assignment Specifications

NOTE: These specifications are for a written text to be uploaded to Sakai's Assignment tool. The specifications are addressed to both the instructor and students. Instructors are asked to review the specifications with their students to ensure understanding.

General Outline

- Individual assignment that integrates reading and TED Talk inputs and synthesizes that information in the form of a written response (2 pages or 500 words).
- Builds on online classwork and homework related to a reading text (5 Steps To Help You Figure Out Your Passion) and a TED Talk (The Way We Think About Work Is Broken).
- Calls for students to critically assess how the inputs are associated and what insights and conclusions can be derived from those associations.
- Asks students to upload their written response to Assignments on Sakai.

Schema

- Online class pre-reading and pre-listening tasks and discussions.
- Comprehension tasks for both reading and TED Talk (including exploring tone, register and authorial or speaker's purpose).
- Bridging task and take-up.
- Discussions on integrating and synthesizing.

Specific Instructions

- To successfully complete this assignment, it is very important to understand each input carefully. In addition to your in-class work with the reading and TED Talk, explore them carefully again—make further notes on the TED Talk and write in the margin of the reading text any questions and comments you have. Note any language difficulties, especially in relation to vocabulary, phrases or clauses you do not understand. Raise these concerns with your teacher if necessary. The more you have mastered the meaning of each input, the better you will be able to relate them one to the other.
- Using the table below, brainstorm the following: main ideas; similarities between the two inputs (integration); differences between the two (integration); important connections (synthesis); and finally, conclusions resulting from those connections. As you are filling in the table, ask yourself the following questions:
  - What is the purpose of each input (reading and TED Talk)?
    - To inform? To persuade? To evoke emotion? To inspire? To correct previously published information?
  - Who is the intended audience of each input?
    - The average person? Peers within the field? People who view things differently? Certain groups within society?
  - What is the main idea of each input?
    - What are the respective key points or positions?
  - How are the inputs connected?
    - Similar theme? Similar or different audience? Similar or different perspectives? Similar or similar or different conclusions?

- What are your resulting conclusions?
  - What can be implied by the connections of the two inputs? Is one position weaker or stronger in light of the other? Or conversely, does one approach build on the other or provide further support? Or does each input need the other in some way? How is the theme enhanced by the two approaches?

Written Response 1 Brainstorm Plan	Main ideas	Similarities (as per questions above)	Differences (as per questions above)	Important connections	Resulting conclusions
Reading text: 5 Steps To Help You Figure Out Your Passion
TED Talk: The Way We Think About Work Is Broken

- After your brainstorming table is filled in, begin to form an outline of your written response. Your outline can follow the template below:
  - Introductory Paragraph: thesis statement
    - introduce text and TED Talk titles and author/speaker
    - thesis statement that captures the main connections and resulting conclusion(s)
  - Body 1 Paragraph: Main Ideas (integration)
    - 5 Steps To Help You Figure Out Your Passion
    - The Way We Think About Work Is Broken
  - Body 2 paragraph: Connections (synthesis)
    - due to similarities (in depth)
    - due to differences (in depth)
  - Concluding Paragraph: Resulting conclusions
    - your argument for what is implied by the connections
- With a completed outline, it is now time to write your response. Remember it must be 2 pages double-spaced or 500 words. Your teacher will help you develop your response, but it is necessary to complete all the above steps first.
- When your written response is complete, review/edit it thoroughly to be sure that your writing is clear and accurate.
- Finally, upload your written response to the Assignment tool on Sakai. Your teacher will direct you regarding this.

NOTE: Please refer to the provided rubric to understand how the assignment will be marked. This is an individual assessment.
