

VISUALIZING POWER & PRIVILEGE

In the "power flower", each "petal" of where individuals might fall on various identity spectrums.

The closer you are to the centre, the LESS power and privilege you hold in that identity.

As you add more petals, your flower becomes larger and more colourful to represent the power and privilege you hold.

This graphic and activity was inspired by the "Power Wheel" created by the Canadian Council for Refugees (and then modified by Syliva Duckworth) in combination with the "Power Flower" activity, a self-reflection tool developed by Canadian educators, and first published in Educating for a Change (1991).

COLOUR YOUR OWN POWER FLOWER

For each identity, click the largest petal that you feel represents your experience.

Then, if there are any smaller petals in the same category, colour them in too!

Remember, the larger and more colourful your flower, the more power and privilege you hold.

What does YOUR power flower look like?

This graphic and activity was inspired by the "Power Wheel" created by the Canadian Council for Refugees (and then modified by Sylvia Duckworth) in combination with the "Power Flower" activity, a self-reflection tool developed by Canadian educators, and first published in Educating for a Change (1991).

